

Short-term Residency Update:

Four scholars joined us this fall as part of the Short-term Residency Program:

Cathy Cavanagh

Cathy returned to us in September for a three-week stay after participating in one of our summer writing workshops. Cathy is a teacher from Ontario, Canada and is currently writing a book for a general audience that explores the lives of biblical women.

Weldon Nisly

Weldon is a former Scholar (2000-2001) who was able to return for a four-week residency. He is head pastor at Seattle Mennonite Church in Washington. Weldon (along with three other Mennonite leaders) is writing a pastoral letter to his congregation on the issue of same-sex unions. He is drawing on the Mennonite peace-making tradition to address an issue that divides virtually every U.S. denomination.

Mary Lou Judd Carpenter

Mary Lou is compiling the letters of her mother, Miriam Barber Judd, wife of missionary and Minnesota Congressman Dr. Walter H. Judd. The letters detail her mother's wealth of experience from war-torn China in the 1930s to her life in the political whirl of Washington, DC. This was Mary Lou's second short-term residency with us.

Forrest Johnson

and his wife, Cynthia, joined us for four weeks in November from Pleasant Hill, TN. While at the Institute, Forrest worked on his project entitled "Dialogues with Thomas Merton," which has grown out of his many trips to Gethsemani Abbey, just three hours from his home.

FALL LECTURE SERIES HIGHLIGHTS

Scholar Steve Ostovich kicked-off our Fall Lecture Series with a presentation entitled "Self-Deception, Shame, and Responsibility: Ordinary Germans and the Third Reich." In his talk Steve explored how, in the post-war years, two German gentile citizens of the town of Hildesheim responded to the events of Germany's recent past. Steve considered the question: How can one be responsible for (and respond to) something that is beyond understanding? He underscored the philosophical and theological implications for how we understand our responsibility for the past, present, and future—especially our debt owed the dead. Almost sixty people attended this lecture which was co-sponsored by the Jay Phillips Center for Jewish-Christian Learning.

On the first seriously cold, blustery night of the fall, Saint John's monks, students from the School of Theology, and sisters from Saint Benedict's gathered to hear Peter Huff's lecture "Pope John Paul II and the Challenge of Interfaith Prayer: Where Dialogue and Doxology Meet." Peter provided an overview of how JP Paul II surprised many even within the Vatican by working tirelessly to advance the cause of ecumenical and inter-religious dialogue. Co-sponsored by the School of Theology.

About seventy people attended the final "lecture" of the semester—a panel presentation entitled, "On Earth As It Is: Saving the Earth, Saving our Souls" featuring scholar Steven Chase and four local experts on community environmental issues. The panelists included: Richard Bresnahan (SJU potter), Tom Kroll (Land Manager, SJU Arboretum), S. Phyllis Plantenberg, OSB (Common Ground Garden), and Derek Larson (Environmental Studies). The panel considered: What is our responsibility for the earth? Can the natural world shape us? How do prayer, imagination, spiritual practices, the arts, and ethics help us connect to the natural world?

The panel was a successful experiment in bringing together diverse voices to address a vitally important issue.

THE BOOK NOOK

A FEW EXAMPLES OF CURRENT INSTITUTE RESIDENT SCHOLARS' RECENT WORK

Peter Huff's, What Are They Saying About Fundamentalisms? is a new addition to Paulist Press's popular WATSA series. Peter's work brings new depth and subtlety to the analysis of a central religious phenomenon of our time.

Carol Neel's co-authored volume, Norbert and Early Norbertine Spirituality, appeared this fall in the esteemed Classics of Western Spirituality series. In this book, Carol seeks to bring the hard-won spiritual wisdom of the past into conversation with our own times.

Steven Ostovich joined some colleagues in publishing, Missing God? Cultural Amnesia and Political Theology, which takes a hard look at how current cultural realities shape our awareness of God.
